One Charge Against Mr. Bliss Is True.

Of all the ridiculous charges that have been made against Mr. Bliss by Mayor Welles and the Pensacola News one, at least, we must candidly admit is true. That is the charge that he is not a rich man.

It is a fact well known that Mr. Bliss has for years devoted his time, talents and money to the cause of labor—to the betterment of his fellowmen and the conditions which surround them.

Had Mr. Bliss devoted the same attention to the matter of mere money-getting that he has spent on those problems, there are few who believe that he would not have been a rich man, or at least a great deal better off today, from a financial standpoint, than he is now.

This being the case, we commend to the Daily News an article which was recently published on its own editorial page and which reads as follows:

It is wonderfully strange how many of the world's profoundest philosophers, thinkers, writers and statesmen struggle along from day to day pursued by the demon of poverty and finally shuffle off life's coil little less than fugitives and paupers.

England's sweetest poets, cleverest actors and distinguished prose writers, led a dog's life dodging tailors, inn keepers and bailiffs.

Who can read, for instance, the lives of Goldsmith and Burns without dropping a tear of pity over their financial woes.

And the lives of those two beautiful characters were no exception to the rule of those who so gloriously enriched the literature of the British Isles.

Dr. Samuel Johnson, the dean of English letters, was compelled for the greater part of his life to live in a garret.

In the United States unfortunately the same story is largely true. The struggle of Edgar Allan Poe with poverty in its wildest form is a case in point and by no means an exceptional one.

Viewed from the practical and business end of life the story of our great men of letters is one of pathos. Jefferson, it will be remembered, had to depend upon a lottery scheme to save his home from foreclosure; Munroe had a hard struggle in keeping the gaunt wolf from the door and died miserably poor; Clay, Webster, Colquhoun and many others, who left brilliant reputations for statesmanship, found it impossible to keep up the business end of life.

Measured in dollars and cents these men left a legacy of unpaid bills, but measured in blessings which belong to the higher realms of life, they left a treasure house of riches more enduring than gold or silver.

Another Announcement Extraordinary.

Under a three-section scare head, double leaded, position first page, top of column, next to reading matter, the Daily News yesterday made the following startling announcement:

Last Friday afternoon, in a public place, Rielly's cigar store, in a crowd of half a dozen citizens, representative of both factions, Mr. Frank L. Mayes, editor and publisher of The "Journal," stated that "if Mr. Bliss was proven a Mormon that he (Mayes) would not vote for him." Mr. John Christie said "that of course he (Christie) would not either."

Of course, it is Mr. Mayes' business, but most people will think his attitude is peculiar. There is a lot in being "professional," but advising people to vote for a man that one would not vote for himself is—well, the limit.

We do not know that the general public is especially interested as to what Mr. Mayes or Mr. Christie may have said, "Friday afternoon, in a public place," upon this important matter, but sufficient answer to the above may be found in the statement here with that both of these gentlemen intend to vote for Mr. Bliss next Tuesday. And it may be further added that they expect to see Mr. Bliss elected mayor.

Training Their Batteries on The Journal.

For some reason not yet quite clear, the little political bunch which is seeking by the aid of the Negro vote to defeat the regularly nominated Democratic candidates in this city, have forsaken their candidate, their platform, and the issues generally and are now training their combined batteries on the devoted head of The Journal.

The speakers all roared The Journal, their newspaper assails it with all the energy of its puny being, and their private caucuses no doubt sit in unrelenting incubation in an effort to hatch something or anything by which they can bring confusion to The Journal or annoyance to its friends.

Here is the latest sample, clipped at random from the columns of their mouthpiece, the Daily News:

The Journal and its blind followers will probably awake to the fact that there are many hundreds of voters in this city and that merely because they have a few hundred need not necessarily imply that they have them all.

It will be conceded that the young man who directs the policy of The Pensacola Journal is a pretty slick duck and is meeting with fairly good business success, but he should not get chummy and think he can run the politics of the city just yet awhile.

Since last night's meeting at Seville Square The Journal is, perhaps, not quite so cocksure that it has the power to sit him down just as it has a mind.

OUR BLOOMIN' CONTEMPORARY
A whole lot of well meaning people in this city have for some time looked upon The Journal as their prophet, guide, philosopher and friend. They have looked up to it as the source of all wisdom in local political affairs and have supposed that if they had The Journal back of them they were safe in aspiring for any sort of political pie in sight. They actually thought The Journal controlled the destinies of Pensacola and they even believed all it says about telegraph service and circulation besides all the other good things it says about itself.

They forget that The Journal has never been right nor the winner in any controversy; but has always been wrong and lost out. Still, by everlasting boasting about itself and its air of assumed acumen it has deceived the public into supposing that it was cutting quite a wide swath in the world. The public will get wise on

The Journal is due course of time and size it up for just what it is.

Now all this no doubt constitutes a good reason why Mr. Shine should be elected.

It is true the public possibly cannot see the reason—at least not without a key—but the public is not supposed to worry about reasons. The Journal has never been "right," has always been "wrong," and sufficient unto the fact is the declaration thereof—reason go hang.

But really, this is a serious thing. It is bad enough, even if true, that The Journal should have "always lost out," but it is infinitely worse that it should have "always been wrong."

Conversely, and by the same logic, we must conclude that our amiable contemporary has "always been right" and has "always won out"—a record which it must not doubt look back upon with feelings of blushing pride and conscientious self-sufficiency.

All of which would be very pertinent and perhaps persuasive political reading were it not for two reasons—first, the people of the community in which both papers circulate know all the facts for themselves; and second, The Journal is not in the remotest sense an issue in the campaign.

The Daily News' appeal to the state press for aid does not seem to be meeting with any very general response. What few papers have expressed themselves on Pensacola's municipal campaign have sized the matter up exactly right, viz: that this is a contest between White Primary Democracy and those who seek to destroy it. Because the Jacksonville Metropolis expresses itself to this effect, the News now characterizes it as customarily "stupid," etc., etc. A few more breaks of this kind and when the state press gets through with the Pensacola News there won't be much left of it.

Since the beginning of the war the Russians have lost fifteen battleships, three coast defense ironclads, fourteen cruisers, three special service vessels and twenty-two torpedo craft, a total of fifty-seven vessels, the value of which was considerably over $125,000,000.

Wonder just what unsalaried office Mayor Welles had in mind when he issued his qualified announcement about never hereafter accepting any official position with a salary attached to it?

When those Russian admirals get back to St. Petersburg they will probably be accorded an even more hearty reception than was tendered them by Admiral Togo.

We won't hear so much about the immense store of gold in the czar's strong room after he makes the final payment of war indemnity to Japan.

An exchange expresses the opinion that submarine boats were used by Admiral Togo. If he didn't use submarines he made a few, anyway.

The Tampa Tribune grows in beauty—and in grace too we hope—as it does in age. It is a credit to all South Florida.

The Journal's circulation statement for May will be published to-morrow. Advertisers will be interested in it.

To-morrow's issue of The Journal will be the biggest 16-page paper Pensacola has ever seen.

That "Bed Mattress" undoubtedly contains a dynamite bomb that is timed to explode June 6.

Togo is still majestically sitting on the lid.

"FIGHTING BOB" EVANS DOESN'T UNDERSTAND.
Savannah News.

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans is quoted as saying that the officers of his fleet don't understand why Rojestvensky didn't keep out in the Pacific instead of going through the straits of Korea to reach Vladivostok. Doubtless a great many people wonder why the Russians took the course they did, but the explanation is probably that they thought the Japanese had their base at Pescadores Islands, as they carefully avoided them. But the reasons for thinking they were there do not seem to be greater than those in favor of their being where they actually were.

What seems more strange is that when Rojestvensky found they were not at Pescadores he didn't come at once to the conclusion that they were somewhere in the straits of Korea. Perhaps he didn't know whether they were at Pescadores or not. If he didn't wasn't he lacking in caution and judgment? Togo, it is safe to assume, knew where the Russians were from the time they reached the coast of China until he met them. He had his scouts out and his wireless system of telegraphy was in use all the time.

But, suppose Rojestvensky had kept in the open Pacific, he would have been compelled to pass through either the La Perouse strait or the Sanger strait in order to reach Vladivostok. Would he have fared better in either of these straits than he did in the Korean strait? It is doubtful. Togo would have known if he had kept to the open sea and could easily have beaten him to either of the foregoing straits. Doubtless Rojestvensky debated the conditions attached to each of the routes before finally deciding in favor of the route he took.

It may be also that the question of coal had something to do with the decision in favor of the Korean strait. If he had kept in the open Pacific the distance that he would have had to cover to reach Vladivostok would have been very much greater.

When the reasons are known for taking the route through the Korean strait it will probably appear that Rojestvensky, knowing all the facts, did what seemed to him at the time the best thing to do.

SUPPRESSION OF THE "PROFESSIONAL" LOBBY.
Jacksonville Sun.

There are pretty general indications of a growing demand for the regulation or suppression of the "professional" lobby, which is fast growing to be an intolerable nuisance and abuse.

Governor Polk was compelled to adopt extraordinary measures at the beginning of the session of the last Missouri legislature to have Governor Herrick and LaFollette have pronounced for express and drastic legislation to eradicate the evil of lobbying. Governor Herrick, of Ohio, in his address accepting the renomination, declared that the "professional" lobby "go," "I care not," he said, "what the purpose of the lobbyists may be, or whether their object be good or bad, it is subversive of the basic principles upon which American institutions are founded to permit a few men to direct or control legislation and to put their judgment as to what is best for the people against that of the representatives of the people elected for the sole purpose of registering their will."

But Governor Herrick draws a distinction between a "good" lobbyist and a "bad" lobbyist as President Roosevelt between good and bad trusts; in concluding he says: "I must not be understood as crying those who appear before the legislative committees in proper and legitimate ways to oppose or support legislation, for in this way the general assembly is often very materially aided in its work. But the professional lobbyist should go, and the general assembly of Ohio must be free from the interference of those who have only personal or selfish ends to serve, whether good or bad, and free to be what the constitution intends, the agents and servants of the people in shaping into the form of law the expression of their sovereign will."

Governor LaFollette also draws a distinction between professional lobbying and legitimate appearances before legislative committees of authorized and self-respecting men to oppose or urge impending measures. His quarrel is with those who "dog the footsteps of legislators," follow them to their hotel rooms or homes and offer all sorts of entertainment as preliminaries to "private argument."

So conservative a newspaper as the New York Tribune showed early in the year by reports from a dozen or more states that the "third house" was everywhere strenuously busy, potent and influential, the exceptions being those states which are so absolutely ruled by bosses and machines that the lobbyist can be dispensed with, a hint or nod to the legislators from the autocrat being more than sufficient.
